Treasury Department Again Overcrowded with Old Files.

Extra Storehouse Filled Up with Tons of Paper Dating Century Back.

The question of what is to be done with the hundreds of tons of files and records that are rapidly accumulating at the Treasury Department is becoming a serious one. At intervals, seven or eight years apart, committees have been appointed to go among the old papers and select those that might be destroyed. This was found a rather difficult task, and

This was found a rather difficult task, and only a few of the records were burned. Thousands of tons of the papers, some of them dating back to the beginning of the last century, are stored on the top floor of the Treasury building. In fact, nearly the entire story is devoted to the storage of files and records of every kind that have passed through the hands of the officials during the last 107 years. The quarters are now becoming crowded The quarters are now becoming crowded and the question as to what is to be done is again confronting the officials.

Several years ago, when the top floor of the Treasury became more than crowded, many of the records were moved to a building in Farreet between Night to a building in E street, between Ninth and Tenth streets, that the government had rented for the purpose. Tons of the papers were taken to the new storagepapers were taken to the new storage-house. One story and then another were eventually filled in the E street store-room; still, the quarters at the Treasury are full again and have as much of a burden as ever. Ten or fifteen years ago a committee was appointed by the Sec-retary and the men set about to destroy as much of the old matter as they could decide upon. Carefully the men went among the files and reports and selected just what was to be burned. Not a great while after the destruction of the records an occasion arose calling them great while after the destruction of the records an occasion arose calling them into use. Then it was found that those that were wanted had been done away with altogether.

Since then the committees have had hard work. They have been more than careful with what they burned, and as a result the number of tons of paper burned did not materially reduce the space in the storage rooms of the Treasury Department. Now the problem is at hand again, and something will have to be done before a great while. Both sides of the halls leading entirely around the building have been filled with these records. They are of every size, papers from every department under the Treasury officials, and many of them are from every corner of the world. The very oldest records were the world. The very oldest records were made out in 1800. They are with reference to the custom-house reports, which came in several years after the establishment of the service in this country. Many of the early-day records were destroyed in the Treasury Department during the British raid of 1814. With the exception of those taken away at that time and those which have since been burned by the officials,
